

Games end on light note

CEREMONIES Following an unprecedented Olympic gold rush that inspired a collective swelling of patriotism, Canadians relaxed yesterday with the closing ceremonies, reminding the world of our unique sense of humour.

There were marching Mounties in mini-skirts, table-top hockey players, red-clad lumberjacks and giant inflatable beavers.

Michael Bublé — never opposed to poking fun at himself — even rode atop a motorized Mountie's hat while performing The Maple Leaf Forever.

Bronze-medallist figure skater Joannie Rochette held the Canadian flag aloft as the Olympic athletes circulated around the B.C. Place stage, the Canucks clad in Cowichan sweaters with ear-flapped hats pulled down over their foreheads.

Gold standard

Brimming with pride as Olympic hosts, Canada exploded in a collective spasm of national joy yesterday as hockey hero Sidney Crosby dispatched the United States in a tightrope-tense hockey thriller that capped the Games with a record-setting 14th gold medal.

Downtown Vancouver exploded in a deafening din of car horns and cowbells in the seconds after Crosby put the puck through U.S. goaltender Ryan Miller's legs for a 3-2 overtime win, avenging the Amerirent the top floor: Yesterday's triumph set an Olympic record for most top-tier finishes in a Winter Games.

The partisan crowd — a roiling, flag-flapping ocean of Canadian colour, except for the odd island of Americana — shook Canada Hockey Place to its foundations when it was over, an uncharacteristic show of national pride rarely witnessed north of the 49th parallel.

"Before this, Canada only seemed patriotic when there was a beer commercial on TV," said Tony Sam, 41, who drove to Vancouver with friends from Chilliwack, B.C., to watch the game.

"This is the most exciting thing that's happened in Canada, maybe ever."

Transit should be improved, not cut v the end of this month, we'll know which inner city bus routes will be shortened, altered or eliminated. There are a few on the chopping block since city council mandated 21,500 hours of service be cut, but with a growing population cutting transit service doesn't make sense.

While our population has been growing by roughly 22,000 annually, Calgary Transit ridership took a hit last year dropping to 94.2 million trips in 2009, a 1.1million decrease from the previous year. Mayor Dave Bronconnier downplayed the results: "Transit ridership is down one per cent, but holding up very, very well under dramatically changing eco-nomic times," he said.

There may be fewer people needing to commute to work due to job loses, but as Ald. Brian Pincott has pointed out, our transit system is designed around moving people in and out of downtown. In response, we should expand the network to serve people beyond work hours

Not all cities affected by job loss saw a correlating decrease in ridership. In fact, ridership in Ottawa set a new record. Their growth is attributed to an extension of their bus-only Transitway, a new park-and-ride lot, 24-hour service for their busiest cross-city bus route and other service improvements.

And so it doesn't seem to make sense that we're cutting service hours. Instead, increased service should produce increased ridership.

I'm all for increasing efficiencies and frankly, if the routes in question are underutilized, then it's logical to cut them. But monies saved in creating new efficiencies should be directed to increased service in other

Instead, while $1.2 million has been cut from Calgary Transit's budget, fares have increased, park-andride users pay where they didn't before and overall service has decreased. Seems like a recipe for a fur-ther dwindling in ridership numbers.

Calgary Transit's last customer survey, conducted in November 2008, could help guide which areas to improve in order to retain riders. Respondents identified service frequency, being on time, not being overcrowded, and convenience of connections and transfers as service areas that need improvement.

These findings fly in the face of planned service cuts.

The cuts also fail to respond to the objectives of Plan It, which calls for quadrupled service levels with cross-town bus routes and increased service frequency.

The city needs to show its commitment to public transit and increase service, not decrease it.

Olympic world is way more fun

Monday morning. March 1. It's no longer the winter Olympics. Now it's just winter. And where I live, it no longer feels like Christmas morning as we bound out of bed every day eager to discover what new medals arrived during the night.

Worst of all, my prized red mittens have gone from being the trendiest winter accessory to being just a souvenir.

Why can't the Olympics last forever? In Olympic world, success isn't as complicated and overwhelming as passing a national policy on global warming — it's simply whether or not our speedskater got across the finish line first Compare, the real world: Partner: You're still on the couch. You were there when I left nine hours ago. You: It's a "Flip this House" marathon.

Partner: I'm so leaving you for someone who takes out the garbage.

... To Olympic world: Partner: You're on the couch. You've been there all day.

You: It's the Olympics. Partner: Of course. Let me get you a snack.

Or, real world:
Me: Let's watch women's sports tonight.

My friend, Rob: Oh yes, let's. Oh dear. There's only men's sports on again. Oh,

Olympic world:

Me: You know, since 80 per cent of Canadian medals in the last two Olympics were won by women, don't you think it makes sense to fund only sports for female athletes? Rob: (gasping, choking and making other very satisfactory noises.)

I realize the Olympics can't last forever. Sooner or later Rick Mercer would run out of human interest stories. Possibly by this Friday. Sometime, we have to return to the real world.

But not yet. For a few days, I'm holding onto the pure, simple joy of feeling that our country is the centre of the universe and happiness is no harder to obtain than a bronze in snowboard cross. And then, I'll return to real life again. But only for another four years.

Israeli police forces stormed the most contentious holy site in Jerusalem yesterday to disperse masked Palestinian protesters hurling objects at a crowd of visitors, authorities said.

The incident was over quickly, but the area remained tense afterward. In the past, violence at the site — known to Jews as the Temple Mount and to Muslims as the Noble Sanctuary — has erupted into deadly battles, and Palestinian officials warned yesterday's unrest threatened to undermine new attempts to restart peace talks.

WWF vows to bring animal back from 'tipping point'

ROMINA MCGUINNESS Metro World News

The Chinese New Year recently entered into the year of the Tiger.

The largest of the cat species, tigers are a powerful and majestic symbol in many cultures yet today find themselves at what scientists refer to as "tipping point" — meaning that left to their own devices in the wild, their destiny could go either way — survival or extinction.

There are as little as 3,200 tigers left in the wild and the WWF together with the World Bank have launched a global campaign, T x 2, urging to double this number by the next year of the Tiger in 2022.

The process started in Oct. 2009, where talks led by tiger experts discussed a series of actions to change

Tiger facts

• The tiger is at top of food chain, feeding off large mammals such as deer, antelope, buffalo. They have been known to eat crocodiles and bears.

 Tigers can consume up to 40 kg of meat at one time.
 Males of the largest species weigh up to 300 kg.
 There are 13 tiger states; Bangladesh, Bhutan, Cambodia, China, India, Indonesia, Lao PDR, Malaysia, Myanmar, Nepal, Russia, Thailand and Vietnam.

There are six living subspecies of tiger; The Amur, Bengal, Indochinese, Malayan, South China and Sumatran tiger. The three other sub-species, the Bali, Caspian and Javan become extinct in the 20th century.

the existing trajectory of tigers from the verge of extinction, to one of survival. The talks will culminate in Vladivostok, Russia, in September 2010 where the Global Tiger Summit will address the following issues to be tackled in the next decade:

1 Strict protection of surviving tiger populations to allow their prey base to return.

20nce the foundation for survival has been set, tigers need large intact landscapes to expand in, without the conflicting presence of humans. In many places.

Bring to a minimum and eventually halt the international demand for tiger parts by controlling business operations and borders.

Political engagement at the highest level and budget.

Governmental commitment and finance is crucial and what has been missing so far.

ACTIVISM WWF scientist Eric Dinerstein is working on the forefront of the Tiger Initiative.

Metro spoke to Dinerstein on why the initiative is important and how they are ensuring tigers will have a future in this world.

Why are wild tigers being poached so much today?

It's much cheaper to go out and hunt a wild tiger than it is to feed and maintain one in captivity. We need to work closely with local governments as very few people are benefiting from this illegal activity.

In your opinion, what are the most shocking tiger

As of today, tigers occupy seven per cent of their historical coverage and that they have 40 per cent less habitable and hunting area than they did 10 years ago.

What is the key strategy needed for the survival of wild tigers?

WWF scientist Eric Dinerstein is leading the fight to save tigers.

Mustering political will between the 13 tiger states. We also need to stabilize the current situation.

Take the case of blue whales, despite efforts to save them, they are breeding very slowly — tigers are the opposite as they breed faster than their prev

What kind of diet does a tiger need in order to survive?

Approximately 50 deer sized animals are needed to feed one female tiger across a one-year period.

Wayne Gretzky holds the mostly recyclable Olympic torch, made by Bombardier, during the Olympic opening ceremonies.

Green is gold for Olympic sponsors

MARKETING Wayne Gretzky clutched a recyclable torch as he rode in a hybrid pickup en route to ignite the natural gas Olympic flame, shining an international spotlight on the creators of those clean-energy innovations.

This moment was a veritable showcase of products from high-profile corporate sponsors seeking to tie their brands to Vancouver's promise to host the greenest Games in history, including GM Canada, maker of the Silverado hybrid, and Bombardier Inc. which manufactured the mostly recyclable torch.

Environmental sustainability is a well-publicized theme for the Vancouver Olympic organizing committee, which has pressured corporate sponsors, from Bell Canada to Canadian Pacific Railway, to reduce their environmental footprints.

The 62 sponsors who committed to VANOC's pledge of carbon neutrality were rewarded with a "sustainability star." Their green initiatives are first to be touted when international media come knocking for sustainabilitythemed Games stories.

VANOC hopes the pres sure they've put on corporate sponsors will have a "ripple effect" and permanently change the way do business, Duffy said.

Corporations that clean up their image for the Olympics can garner longterm payoffs by tying their environmental initiatives to a brand image that consumers already recognize, said Marc Stoiber of Vancouver's Change marketing, which helps brands promote themselves as green. THE CANADIAN PRESS

You can avoid online scams

HEATHER BUCHAN

The Internet has afforded many conveniences from online banking, to shopping, to dating, to reading and watching the news — done from the comfort of home.

But there's a darker side to Internet use: Increased risk of becoming a victim of fraud. Internet fraud comes in many forms phishing, click fraud. spam, online marketing, and contests and surveys.

In the past few years, the RCMP has seen an alarming rise in the number of Internet-based scams in Canada.

Because the Internet is a decentralized network with no company or government control, it's all the harder for police to crack down on cyber-criminals.

cv. says much online fraud is building towards identity theft, which is why it's imperative to protect sensitive information.

Here are some ways to protect yourself:

 Use a different user ID and password combination for different accounts.

Make the passwords more complicated than just combining letters and numbers, and change them on a regular basis.

 Protect your computer with anti-virus software, spyware filters, e-mail filters and firewall programs.

 Before entering personal information on a website, read their unique privacy and security policies.

If you suspect any fraudulent activity online, report it to the police.

EU scolds Google on privacy

ONLINE European Union data privacy regulators are telling Google to warn people before it sends cameras out into cities to take pictures for its Street View maps. In a letter to the company, regulators also say Google should shorten the time it keeps the original photos from one year to six months.

In a statement, Google says it has a legitimate need to retain Street View images for one year.

The company also says it already posts notifications on its website about where its Street View cameras are clicking.

Blue Jays won't rush recovering McGowan

Dustin McGowan was pitching to major league hitters yesterday for the first time in more than a year and a half.

Having him make Toronto's opening-day roster is not a priority for the Blue and it shouldn't be for McGowan, either.

Crosby nets winner in overtime as Canadian men bring home gold

JEFF HODSON for Metro Canada

Sidney Crosby didn't even see his gamewinning overtime goal that captured gold for Canada yesterday in men's ice hockey.

He just heard screaming.

"I just shot it and didn't see it after that," said Crosby, who took a feed from a falling Jarome Iginla and whistled it past tournament MVP Ryan Miller as Canada beat the U.S. 3-2 and won the final gold medal of the 2010 Winter Olympics.

Crosby skated into the corner as 16,000 raucous fans in Canada Hockey Place, who spent much of the game chanting, cheering, dancing and waving flags, erupted in a roar. Crosby was engulfed by his teammates as they streamed off the bench.

KRISTEN THOMPSON

It seemed like the perfect ending to an Olympic Games that had a rocky start.

On the heels of Sidney Crosby's spectacular game-winning goal in overtime, 60,000 jubilant spectators made their way from Vancouver's packed downtown streets into B.C. Place for the closing ceremonies.

The event began with a mime pulling up the Olympic cauldron's fourth arm — which failed to rise during the opening ceremonies — and spectators cheered as Catriona LeMay Doan reappeared to ignite it properly this time.

For the next two hours, the crowd was dazzled with a spectacle that celebrated all things Canadian, including toques, beer, poutine and our propensity to apologize.

Performers included Neil Young, Michael Bublé, Nickelback, Avril Lavigne, Alanis Morissette and k-os.

"If the Canada that came together on opening night was a little mysterious to some, it no longer is," said John Furlong, CEO of the Vancouver organizing committee.

Athletes gave us lifelong memories

I was in the presence of the Olympians, athletes with skill and drive who have the ability to work magic and restore faith.

People like 27-year-old Devon Kershaw of Sudbury, Ont., who raced his heart out in the cross-country marathon only to finish fifth and miss a medal by six tenths of a second. Kershaw's result was the best ever by a Canadian in this event. He more than held his own against the legendary European giants of Nordic sport.

thing Olympians is that outwardly they resemble the rest of us. They come from small towns and loving families and are built in a variety of shapes and sizes. What distinguishes them is an ability to express incredible talent and grace in a pressure-filled crucible on the international field of play.

No better illustration exists than Joannie Rochette, the figure skater who survived the sudden death of her mother mere hours from the biggest moment of her life. Rochette soared to a bronze medal and delivered the most inspirational performance of the Olympics.

She is a remarkable young woman, the girl next door if you will, with the ability to conjure up a heroic act.

The Canadian men who captured precious hockey gold here received the lion's share of the attention and that is understandable. We live in a country where supremacy in that sport is a vital element to people's sense of worth.

But we should never forget that all the Olympians who graced the stage in Vancouver Whistler have been part of the story at these Games.

From across the country, they are our neighbours, our friends, our sons and our daughters.

Canadian These Olympians are ordinary people, it's true, but they have proven they are capable of creating extraordinary memories.

Oscar pools a great way build your team

JON TATTRIE for Metro Canad

With the Olympics just finished, the Oscars dawning and March Madness drawing near, offices across Canada are abuzz with pools, but are they a teambuilding force for good or a distraction that risks turning the office into The Office?

Dr. Ian Bradley, a workplace psychologist in Montreal, says there are risks and rewards to office pools. "Some people get really into it and one wonders how much work time is devoted to the pool," he says. "The benefits are in terms of camaraderie and excitement."

He considers pools an organic form of official team-building exercises, but without the price tag of a seminar or a weekend bonding in the woods. Pools can connect staff at different levels and in different levels and diff ferent departments, opening new lines of communication.

"We need as much fun in the workplace as possible, within bounds. The more things that are humorous and bring people together and allow them to forget about the drudgery and stresses of the work, I think all the better," Bradley says.

Because of those advantages, he urges bosses to accept pools even if staff go overboard for the Oscars, so long as they don't go all Michael Scott, from The Office, on their colleagues.

Maricel Dicion organizes the Oscar office pool at the Toronto branch of the global communications firm Cohn & Wolfe. "Everyone participates. We're a full-service PR agency and we all have lots of things to do, but things like this really help build team moral," she says. "It's just something fun to think about and something fun to do."

The email-organized pool doesn't involve money and doesn't distract people from their work, she says, but in fact gives them a useful break in the day. "Plus, if you win you get bragging rights until the next Oscar pool," she notes.

As Bradley predicted, the pools cut across the normal office barriers of rank and department, encouraging staff to get to know their coworkers.

"It gives you an excuse to congratulate the person who won," Dicion explains. "If you don't get to see someone over at the other side of the office, you might go over and say, 'What do you think?' It's just an excuse to see one of your colleagues."

Precious wins big at NAACP Image Awards

It was a winning night for Precious at the 41st NAACP Image Awards.

The heart-wrenching tale of an illiterate and abused teen who finds hope in a Harlem classroom was named outstanding motion picture and outstanding independent film at Friday's ceremony. Stars Mo'Nique and Gabourey Sidibe, screenwriter Geoffrey Fletcher and director Lee Daniels also won.

Daniels excitedly accepted the best-picture prize, surrounded by his cast and fellow producers.

"No one in Hollywood told me they wanted to see a movie about a 350-pound black woman with HIV," he said. Sidibe objected, and Daniels corrected himself: "She's not 350 pounds. This was before you were hired."

Presented by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the Image Awards honour diversity in the arts and outstanding achievements in film, television, music and literature.

Sidibe cried as she accepted the award for outstanding actress in a motion picture for her turn as Precious, the overweight, twice-pregnant teen who discovers self-worth through reading and writing.

"It's so awesome to win! I love winning," said the Oscar nominee, who made her acting debut with this film.

Fellow Oscar nominee Mo'Nique, who has swept the supporting actress prize throughout Hollywood's awards season for her moving turn as abusive mother Mary Jones, added another trophy to her collection with the Image Award for her role in Precious.

Half the Sky LIVE explores plight of oppressed women

Last year, New York Times columnist Nicholas Kristof and his wife, Sheryl WuDunn published their book Half the Sky: Turning Oppression into Opportunity for Women

Worldwide
The book shows how most societies suppress women through terrible—and culturally accepted—measures, such as stoning, genital mutilation, sex slavery, maternal morbidity, forced marriage, honour killings and other atrocities.

But the book also focuses on the small, empowering steps these oppressed women are doing to change the status quo.

This Thursday, in celebration of International Women's Day on March 8, movie theaters across North America will broadcast Half the Sky LIVE; a combination of documentary and celebrity discussion panel, based on Kristof and WuDunn's work.

Filmed on a snowy February day at New York University and presented by the poverty-fighting organization CARE, Half the Sky LIVE features a celebrity panel discussion about the plight of women, readings by celebrities such as Maria Bello and Marisa Tomei, musical performances by India. The chin comeback

Will Leno regain his late-night lead? Media analyst says 'yes'

The chin is coming back to late-night on NBC. So is the desk, the couch and, the network fervently hopes, the audience.

When Jay Leno reclaims The Tonight Show tonight, NBC is banking that the ratings spiral that marked Conan O'Brien's brief tenure as host will quickly fade to a dim memory.

If viewers want to dwell on the messy dithering that led to this point — Leno moved to prime-time, NBC affiliates rebelling at his low ratings, O'Brien balking at NBC's directive that he and Tonight shift to midnight, O'Brien exiting and leaving a diminished audience behind — the network is focused on the end result.

With the Winter Olympics providing a big platform, NBC aired a promotional spot advising that "the chin" was back. Another spot had Leno breezing down a coastal highway in a snazzy convertible that shed the number "10" for "11:35." It cast him as a happy traveller headed home, back where he belongs, after a misadventure not even worth a postcard.

Lisa Howfield, general manager of NBC affiliate KVBC in Las Vegas, thinks Leno's fans will be right behind him.

"I suspect he'll get the same numbers (ratings) he had in prime-time, which are the same numbers he had in late-night. ... I think it's probably going to get right back into normal viewing patterns," Howfield said.

Media analyst Steve Sternberg agrees Leno should regain the latenight lead, which he held for most of his run, despite some observers' assertions that he ended up cast as the villain when O'Brien took a powder.

"I don't think Leno's image took much of a hit with his fans at all," said Stern-

"That was more of a press and Conan fan-Twitter creation than anything else. Half of Leno's audience is over 55, a group that tends to be very loyal."

Leno averaged 5.2 mil-

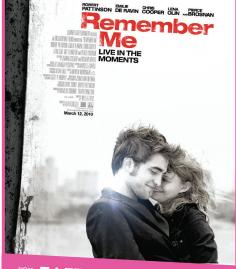

Leno averaged 5.2 million viewers nightly in his final season of Tonight before O'Brien took over last May, and was drawing virtually the same number — 5.3 million — to his primetime show.

Expectations were higher for the new show, however, because more people watch TV in prime-time, and affiliates complained loudly to NBC because their local newscasts were taking a viewership hit because of the weak lead-in. NBC eventually bowed to the pressure.
